From the section Tennis Ilie Nastase (left) won the men's singles title at Wimbledon in 1966 Former world number one Ilie Nastase has said he would "definitely" participate in the R-Day parade at the ATP Finals in London on Monday if he was asked. Nastase, who was banned for life in 1977 for cocaine use, said he had been approached by the organisers to take part. "I would definitely do it if it was organised properly," he told BBC Sport. "I don't think I would go on my own. It's for retired tennis players." R-Day commemorates the death of former player and coach Arthur Ashe, who was the first black player to win the singles title at Wimbledon in 1969 and
