This provision says in part: "Vessel is to be delivered in as good condition as at any time prior to date of delivery and free of all rust and deterioration. Buyer agrees to pay reasonable cost of the necessary repairs to make the vessel free of all rust and deterioration." [2] The provision states: "Builder's risk and title vests in owner the same day construction is substantially completed." [3] We agree with American Guarantee and First Texas and reject the arguments of Hoffman and Easterling based on the fact that all the money paid on the contract was not applied to the vessel's purchase price. Unless there is an appurtenance agreement in the contract, the project is essentially complete when the final payment is made. A contract for sale of a ship contemplates that title remains in the seller at all times and it is only upon delivery that it is transferred to the buyer. Heiskell and Moore-Kile Shipbuilding Company v. The S.S. J.S. John, 207 F.2d 595 (4th Cir.1953) (contract for sale of cargo storage capacity under a time charter; holding that vendor did not have title as of the date charter was executed). [4] The appellees point out that the presumption of knowledge has been abolished in admiralty cases, that the rule requiring transfer of an interest in the ship to a trustee, if the owner sells or alienates his title, is intended 1cb139a0ed
